[For the Mountaineer.] THE TRUTH.

ed at the request of Mr. T. Giles, the biled hary

BY JOHN S. DAVIS.

I nove the truth, the heavenly truth; I loved it from my early youth: Where'er its banners were unfurled. I gleaned a little here and there; Yes, gathered some from everywhere: At last it shone so bright around, That soon the fount of truth I found.

I now enjoy its blessings free, They can't be well denied to me; Truth's in my mind, and will be there, Howe'er my body haps to fare. I love the truth, which others hate; Truth will prevail, and power create: Though earth looks old, and dies away, Yet on its face truth e'er will stay.

I like the truth—the righteons do: Its haters, they must like it too. Error must cause; for truth and light Will turn to day its gloomy night. Then sing of truth, and by it stand; Its conquest day is near at hand: 'Twill reign on earth, as now above; And all will live in truth and love.

In connection with this branch of the subject, it may be very appropriately suggested to the pupil, that the natural key of the human voice is the only point of elevation in speaking at which the speaker may be able to acquire and command the graces of action, and reduce them to practice whenever he participates in the labors of a discussion, delivers an address, or includes with what incalculable facility they of the same party of intentions for which they were given, in it is equally kind and benevolent, that and benevolent, that and benevolent, that and benevolent, that are uniform movements of the same party of dancers suddenly become spiritless, cumbrous, and laborious.
